The CIA in the Iran Affair

ILLEGIB

MR. TOM BROKAW: New details emerged today about the place of the CIA in the Iran affair. What did it know and when?

CIA Director William Casey told a Congressional Committee two weeks ago that a New York businessman, Roy F~~u~~rmak, had raised the possibility that money was being diverted to the Contras.

Today, F~~u~~rmak spoke with NBC's James Polk about his dealings with the CIA.

~~JAMES POLK:~~ It was in September at a meeting in Paris that the broker for the Iran arms deal, Manucher Ghorbanifar, told his partner, Adnan Khashoggi, some of the money might have gone to the Contras.

Roy F~~u~~rmak was there as Khashoggi's associate. He said the two men were talking about how the arms price had been marked up.

ROY F~~u~~RMARK: Ghorbanifar then made the comment, "Maybe the funds have gone some other place. Maybe they're used for the Contras or something."

POLK: F~~u~~rmark met with CIA Director William Casey early in October to tell him about money missing the deal, not about the Contras.

Later in October at this New York restaurant, F~~u~~rmark said he told his story to two CIA officials. He repeated what Ghorbanifar said about the Contras.

F~~u~~RMARK: They took some notes and had no reaction at all.

POLK: One of the people meeting F~~u~~rmark was retired CIA agent, George Cave, the same man who'd accompanied former National Security Advisor Robert McFarlane on the secret trip to Iran.

F~~u~~RMARK: George Cave was in attendance.

POLK: The CIA won't say why it sent Cave to see F~~u~~rmark or how large a role Cave had in all the dealings.

The story from sources tonight is that the CIA did raise warning signals about money for the Contras as early as October when F~~u~~rmark first mentioned it, but Casey passed on the information to someone else in authority. No one will say who or how high and, in the end, nothing was done.
